Difference between switching Apple ID and changing Apple ID

Changing your Apple ID and switching your Apple ID are two distinct actions that involve your Apple account, but they serve different purposes and have other implications. Let's explore the differences between these two actions.

- Switching an Apple ID: It means using a different existing ID on your device or within an Apple service. People do this for reasons like using a separate account for iCloud, the App Store, iTunes, or other Apple services. It's like logging out of one account and logging into another.
- Changing Apple ID: It requires editing the email linked to your Apple ID. You may do it for various reasons, like losing access to your current email, preferring a new primary Apple ID email, or updating your details. This process might include moving your data, purchases, and subscriptions to the new email address.

Though you can't change your Apple ID using the Mac Settings app, you may use the web browser on your Mac to do the same. The same steps can also be applied on your iPhone, Android device, or Windows PC.
