

Perhaps you have multiple clips of an event taken in quick succession, or a few beautiful landscape videos that you shot using your iPhone camera.

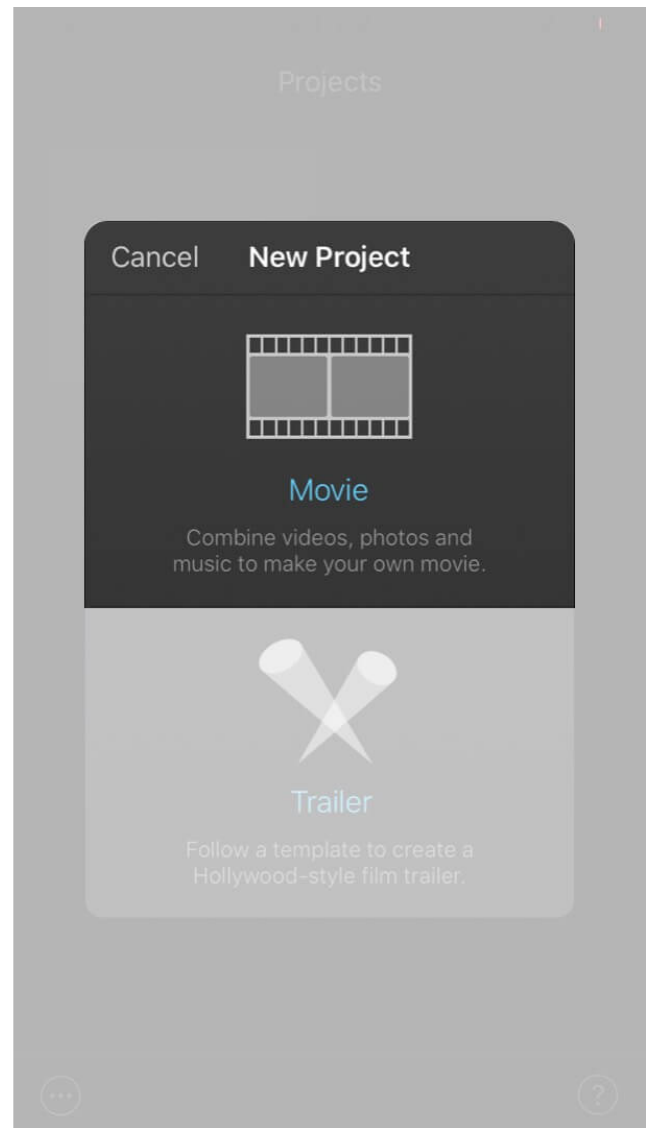

For easier sharing or conveniently storing multiple clips as one file, you may like to merge them. iMovie makes it easy to combine several videos together on an iPhone or iPad. And, as a major added bonus, it doesn't leave a watermark.

Ready to get started? Here's how to merge videos on iPhone and iPad.

How to combine videos on iPhone or iPad for free using iMovie

1. Check that iMovie is installed on your device. If not, download it from the App Store. Open iMovie.

2. Select two or more videos that you'd like to merge. Tap Create Movie. All selected clips will be imported to the iMovie editing timeline. Scroll the thin video strip to the beginning.

3. Now, tap the Play button. Your videos will play one after the other. If you like it, you can export it now (see step 8). To spruce up the video with effects, follow along with the next steps.

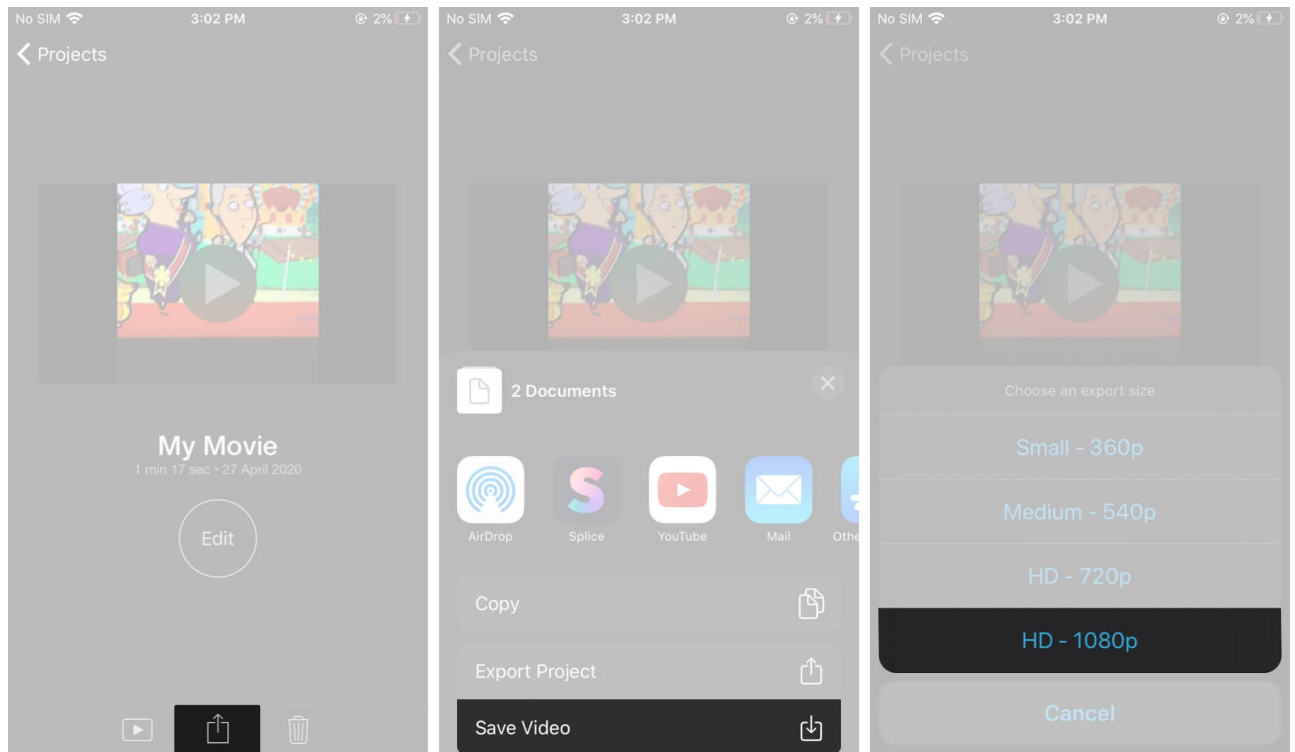

4. Scroll the thin video strip slowly. Tap the Dissolve icon (two triangles facing each other).

5. Choose None to have no effect between videos. If you wish to add effects, tap an effect, and then scroll the video strip a bit from left to right and hit the Play button. You can also select a duration for the effect.
6. Now, scroll the video strip to the beginning and tap the Play button to review your video.

7. Tap Done at the upper left corner to export the video.
8. Tap the Share icon and select Save Video. Select a video quality if prompted. Your final merged video will be exported and saved to Photos.

That's it!

This is how you can combine multiple videos using iMovie. Now, let's check out some third-party apps to merge videos on iPhone or iPad.
