Linking Facebook and Instagram accounts makes cross-platform sharing effortless. However, at times, you might want to portray two different sides to your personality or cater to different sets of audiences on either platform. To do that, you'll have to unlink Facebook and Instagram from the Meta Accounts Centre.

Before I show you how it's done, let me assure you that disconnecting Facebook and Instagram won't delete the posts you have already shared. Apart from posts, your followers, preferences, likes, reels, and so on will remain independently intact on both platforms.

With basics out of the way, let's quickly look at how to unlink your Facebook account from Instagram on your iPhone or Computer.

You can complete the process from the official Instagram site too. But as you know, its UI is quite dated and offers fewer features.

How to limit your Instagram-Facebook interaction

While unlinking Facebook from Instagram is easy, it will leave you at a dead-end. I mean, the two accounts will not recognize each other or be in sync.

So, instead of completely unlinking the two, I'd suggest turning off the automatic share options. This action stops the default sharing of posts on both platforms.

In fact, while posting, you can choose whether you want to share it on both platforms. To achieve this control from your iPhone:

- 1. Visit the Accounts Centre on either the Instagram or Facebook app.
- 2. Go to Connected Experiences.
- 3. Select Sharing across profiles.

Conclusion

Instagram generally tends to have a younger audience than Facebook. So, for a lot of youngsters, sharing the same content on both might not be fun. (I won't tell you why [])

As you just saw, Meta has made it quite easy for you to unlink the two using its Accounts Centre. If you get stuck in the process or have any other questions regarding these two platforms, you can reach out to me in the comments. I'd be happy to respond.
